Partition Lines/ Field Divisions

There are so many ways to create a unique device by using division lines. In this article, we will look at some "basic" and some "complex" lines that are safe to use in your Adrian Heraldry.

In the Heraldry manual on page 20, section V.a.1,2

1. A field may be divided by partition lines running in the direction of any SIMPLE ORDINARY (VII.A)
2. A field may be composed of multiple partition lines in the direction of SIMPLE ORDINARY, filling the area of the shield.

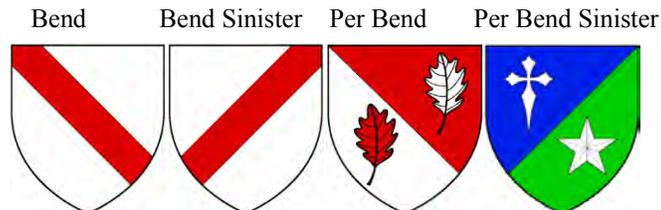

Part one: Bend

Using the book "A Dictionary of Heraldry" by Stephen Friar. ¹

A Bend and Bend Sinister - Ordinaries. A broad band extending from dexter chief to sinister base or sinister chief to dexter base. Charges placed on a bend correspond with the direction of the bend unless otherwise specified, as do the ermine spots and varied fields of compony, counter-compony and chequy.

Per Bend, Per Bend Sinister is the parting of the field. The term Parted (Scottish) or Part (English) basically mean the same as "Per" and is more often omitted as it would not be necessary. (Fox-Davies)

Here are examples;

Ok, now for some interesting variations on the bend that can be used.

In the Friar book, on page(s) 216-217 are pictures of the various lines that can be used to divide your bend and create something unique to you. Please remember to do your homework. Is it period? Do I have proof that it was used?

Here are a few examples of taking a bend and making it unique to the "owner".

Per bend Vert and Azure, a bend beveled between two oak leaves Or (Alistrina Lannoon Bhallach)

Per bend indented Azure and Argent, a tree fruited and eradicated counterchanged
(Antonia Lopez-Hawk)

Per bend tierced per fess counterchanged Azure and Argent, overall a seahorse Sable.
(House Sable Seahorse)

As you can see, these approved devices look very complex yet follow all of the rules.

Next article, we look at the Chevron. Again a simple division, but it can also be just as interesting.

Please remember to consult with your local Herald with any questions you might have. As always, do your homework before you turn in your device. Use a good search engine, books, the reference section of the local library. ASK QUESTIONS, there are never any dumb questions when learning something new.
